From Where I Stand...

By Rabbi Raphael Asher

Imagine Shir Joy in the light of a Shabbat morning service. Instead of shaking your egg-shakers (among other things) after dinner, imagine breakfast and coffee at home and then a music-fest surrounding a Saturday morning Torah service. Add some lox and schmears with friends at the Kiddush and you've got a pretty good start on being rested and refreshed.

Common American weekend activities can be riveting but ultimately draining. Ski-trips, kids' sports, TV football, and shopping sprees are good for an adrenaline rush, but leave us depleted by Monday morning. As a kid I remember calculating weekend time like an hourglass leaking precious grains of sand. However, Shabbat, in contrast, with its connections to time immemorial can tap into your deeper reserves. Prayer, learning, and community with an optional one-minute aliyah-rush can be a great mix before you put on your sneakers and / or take a 'gut schlaf.'

Saturday morning services without a Bar/Bat Mitzvah are usually held in the library where the cozier setting allows people to ask questions as we go along. The Torah service is less majestic but more inviting as folks can get a closer seat to the scroll and discuss the nuances of the text.

Shir Joy will be on Saturday, January 15 at 10 am. Moreover, with a Bar/Bat Mitzvah hiatus this winter, there will also be Morning Minyans for New Year's (January 1), January 22, February 12 and February 24, all from 10 – 11:30 am.

Any Religious School students who come to a minyan get double credit for their annual service attendance. Any adults that come get a triple bonus: rest, spiritual refreshment, and a morning dose of Jewish literacy.

Reflections...

By Cantor Jennie Chabon

When I was in cantorial school, I spent a lot of time—many, many hours in seminars and coaching sessions—preparing for my life as a cantor. A lot of that time was spent preparing my voice: learning our ancient melodies, studying the craft of cantorial singing, listening to old recordings of cantors from the 1950s who mastered our liturgical music so magnificently. I loved that part of my time in the seminary. I find hazzanut—cantorial music—to be so deeply moving and evocative, and I hoped and imagined that I would get to share it with my future congregation. In my pre-graduation understanding of the pulpit, I thought that singing would be a big part of my job—surely the most meaningful part for me!--since it is what moved me most deeply in school.

Now, 6 years into my first pulpit at B'nai Tikvah, I understand that though hazzanut still stirs my soul like no other music; and though people certainly associate me with my voice, it is not singing that is the foundation of my life as a cantor. It is people, the marvelous people who belong to our synagogue and who give me the opportunity to share in the most poignant moments of their lives.

I have never known this more clearly than a few weeks ago, when I took part in the conversion of a beautiful woman in our congregation. I had been studying with this woman for the past year and a half. She was my first conversion student, the first person to trust me with her journey towards becoming Jewish. What an honor! It should come as no surprise that I felt incredibly excited on the day that her beit din and mikveh finally arrived.

It is hard to describe the awe of seeing someone immerse in the mikveh with the intention of becoming Jewish. I have been with friends who immerse before getting married, friends who are moving into a second trimester of pregnancy, friends who are ready to move on from a difficult period in their life. But none of those immersions change someone's identity in just a few holy minutes.

President's Message

By Lisa Wenger

"We are a small-to-medium-sized congregation that doesn't want to be a big congregation."

I wrote those words in my December Tikvah Talk article, as part of an attempt to identify characteristics of our CBT community. One of our congregants who disagreed with this comment was interested enough to approach me about it. He felt that this statement contradicts our usual sentiments about welcoming new members. I am so glad that he alerted me to this possible interpretation, because I certainly did not mean to imply that our doors are closed. Quite the contrary! We always want to add new members, and in fact a healthy financial future depends on our doing just that. More important than finances, however, is that we want CBT to continue to be a source of Jewish community for many generations to come.

When I wrote the words quoted above, I thought that I was just expressing the obvious. I value our somewhat intimate size, which allows us to develop close relationships with one another and with our clergy and staff and to fit comfortably in our facility. I just took for granted that everyone else likes our size too. It turns out that some CBT congregants may want our synagogue to be much bigger, perhaps because bigger synagogues can provide more programming, while still allowing for smaller, internal groups to form. Others, like the one who approached me, may feel that there is no point in deciding something like size because it isn't completely within our control.

I no longer presume to know the definitive answer to the size question or any other about who we are. Instead, the reaction of the congregant who disagreed with my comment affirms that the self-assessment process I described last month will be worth undertaking. Rabbi Alan Henkin, from the URJ, has already sent us a guidebook for forming focus groups. He will also be sending us some surveys that other congregations have used. I look forward to discussing our identity with all of you. The results of the process might surprise us.

Turn It, Turn It, Turn It Again

By Phil Hankin, Director of Education

To Camp or Not to Camp?

To camp or not to camp, that is the question. You can just imagine Hamelet debating this issue with his wife when discussing what to do with the kids for the summer as January/February roles around. The debate plays out every year after the calendar turns, when summer brochures begin to arrive in the mail.

What choices do you make? What influences those choices? Sports? Money? Quality of program/education? Religion? Convenience? Staff ratios?

As a parent myself, I debate the same issues for my children. Is the camp Jewish or not? Is my child going to be watched and nurtured safely and respectfully? Is this camp experience going to fleece my wallet or is there a greater benefit for my child? Is there pre and after-care (for day camp situations)? Are there going to be any of my children's friends attending? What skills will my child learn after attending this camp? Is the camp ACA (American Camping Association) accredited? The list is endless.

As a former summer camp director and current Jewish educator, and someone who grew up attending a Jewish camp every summer since I was 8 years old, I have a certain bias when it comes to the choices parents make in determining the best program for their children. I look at summer camping through different lenses than most parents. First and foremost, I look for a safe and nurturing environment. Is there quality education and sufficient staffing ratios? Do the staff look at each individual child as special and unique or are they just lumped together and not really well supervised? How old are the staff members and what experiences/qualifications do they hold as they relate to camp and supervising young children? When referring to Jewish camps, is the camp considered a Jewish camp or is it simply a camp for Jews? Who runs the educational programming and is there a particular theme for the summer?

Once you have weighed all of your options, the hardest decisions come down to the area that many parents struggle with because it is not tangible, not in the present. What is the ultimate outcome for my child this summer? Is this going to be Jewish summer or not or a combination of both? Do I look for a camp (or series of camps) that will satisfy my immediate needs for this summer and deal with the succeeding summers as they come or do I establish a pattern that will allow my child to grow and develop every year? What do I want for my child as they leave the nest and make decisions on their own? Will they have a strong Jewish identity? Do I care? Isn't Religious School enough to give my child the Jewish education he/she needs?

Upcoming Events:

Sunday, January 9, 11:30 am – MOMA tour

We are planning to see the Henri Cartier-Bresson exhibit at the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art. $14 general adm/$8 seniors. Henri Cartier-Bresson was a 20th Century Photojournalist. His work was innovative and ranks among the most accomplished in the history of Photography. His images of the early 1930's helped define the creative potential of photography, and his ability to capture life on the run made his work synonymous with "the decisive moment" - the title of his first book. Cartier-Bresson produced major bodies of work on India and Indonesia at the time of Independence, China during the revolution, the Soviet Union after Stalin's death, the United States during the postwar boom, and Europe as its old cultures confronted modern realities.

This exhibit will take a fresh look at his career.

To confirm a reservation for this outing, please email Susan Friedman at:

Friday, January 14, 6:30 pm – Sisterhood Shabbat

Cantor Chabon will be leading the Sermon in Song this Shabbat. Sisterhood members will have an opportunity to participate in the service. Please try and come as this is our chance to be together at Shabbat Services.

Tuesday, January 18, 6:30 pm - Book Sisters

We will have a potluck dinner and a discussion of "The Love Ceiling" by Jean Davies Okimoto. Bring a vegetarian or dairy dish to share in our Social Hall. RSVP to me at .

Sunday, January 30, 10:30 am – Chair Yoga

Leah Eskanazi, our Sunday Yoga teacher has graciously volunteered to lead a special Yoga session for us. This is the kind of Yoga anyone can do, balancing is not necessary. It is a fun workout.

Reflections...

A ger, a convert, enters the waters on the brink of conversion and reemerges as a Jew. All of the months of preparation and study lead up to that moment: the descent into the waters, the realization that the waters are warm and soothing, the deep breath before the body disappears under the water, staying there, submerged, for a few timeless seconds. And then, the trembling voice reciting the words of the Shema, claiming our heritage in that moment as their history and destiny.

I have witnessed many beautiful ceremonies in my time as a cantor, but none quite as exquisite as a person becoming Jewish. What a gift to our community--what a blessing!--to have someone choose, in such an intense and powerful way, to become part of the Jewish People.

Turn It, Turn It, Turn It Again...

Various reports over the years reflect how effective Jewish summer camping has on individuals. For many Jews, attending a Jewish summer camp is often the single most formative Jewish experience that they have had. Camp is critical in forming identity, teaching about Jewish culture and institutions, and – most importantly – socializing young Jews into the Jewish community. Camp is a holistic immersion experience. It is a socializing experience much more than it is an educational experience. Camps are isolated and insulated. They have their own cultures and campers quickly develop their own internal tribes. The relationships formed are intense and life-long. Camp environments show young children what it is like to be in a 100% Jewish community. This is foreign to most and was the most striking and impressive aspect of camp for my when I was 8. The language is “Jewish”, the daily schedule is “Jewish”, the food is “Jewish”; everyday is eat, sleep, and play “Jewish”. Your camp counselors are not only your de-facto parents but also perform the vital function of being a Jewish role model. I would not be the Jew I am today if it was not for my Jewish summer camp experiences. The relationships I formed with bunkmates and fellow campers are cemented with the shared memories of the bygone days playing ga-ga, swimming, singing, dancing, Shabbat, Havdalah in the Redwood Grove, escaping from Russia to Palestine, hikes to the Star of David on the hill, late-night raid attempts on the girls’ cabins, etc.

My hope for you is that you attempt to make decisions for your children that have as lasting an affect on their Jewish future as the one my parents made for me.

Camperships are available through the Jewish Community Federation of the Greater East Bay or here at B'nai Tikvah. Please contact Judy or Lance in the Temple Office if you are in need of some financial help. Also, please mark your calendars for Sunday January 23 when a representative from URJ Camp Newman will be here to talk to the students and parents about attending this summer. They will be here at 9:45am that morning. I know that spaces are filling up fast so this is a must to find out more about our regional Reform residential summer camp in Northern California (the camp is located in Santa Rosa).

As an added bonus, I will be attending Camp Newman this summer from June 21-July 3. I will be serving in the capacity of “Jewish professional faculty” during that time. If your child attends camp during that 2-week period, I will be hosting a gathering in my cabin at some point during that time for all CBT campers.

See you this summer! My goal is to have all CBT students attend a Jewish summer camp at some point this summer, and specifically have at least 35 attend Camp Newman. Let's see how close we can get!!

I've been thinking a lot about blessings in the last few weeks. The recent passing of a beloved aunt of mine has probably planted the seed for this reflection. I think this life experience made me see blessings in a new light.

In Judaism we start most formal blessings as, "Baruch atah adonai eloheinu melech ha-alom" and insert your blessing here. In daily life this is not how we express the appearance of a blessing, though it often does include a reference to G-d. For example, this Fall I've been particularly stunned by the beauty of the turning colors of the leaves. When I experience that kind of moment I often hear myself say, "Oh my G-d!" I'm often not even 100% conscious of saying it.

Maybe the point of the formal blessing is building up our consciousness of the blessings that are all around us? Upon returning from my bereavement leave in mid-November, it happened that a Wednesday night of Midrasha was also the appearance of the annual Leonid meteor shower. I love meteor showers – they fill me with awe, wonder and a sense of being blessed. This made me wonder, "is there a Jewish prayer for a meteor shower, or a falling star?" A Google search lead me to a book by the British Rabbi, John D. Rayner, entitled, "A Jewish Understanding of the World." Rabbi Rayner cites two prayers, one that ends with praise of G-d as the "author of Creation." The second praises G-d as one whose "power and might fill the world." So, that night we closed Midrasha as a community with these three elements:

1. We sang "Eili Eili" by Hannah Senesh. The lyrics are so simple and are a kind of prayer about awe - "Oh Lord, my G-d, I pray that these things never end, the sand and the sea, the rush of the waters, the crash of the heavens, the prayer of the heart."
2. I explained that our teens could be awed by the Leonid meteor shower that night – if they chose to wake up to see it. I invited them to close their eyes and think of a time in their lives that "filled them with wonder." Together, with a memory in their head and the community surrounding them, (many had their arms around each other) we said the prayer for wonderment in Hebrew and English. The words are - Baruch ata adonai, eloheinu melekh ha-olam, oseh ma'aseh b'reshet. Or in English, Praised are you, G-d, ruler of the Universe, source of Creation.
3. Lastly, we sang Israel Kamakawiwo'ole's version of "Somewhere Over the Rainbow," which combines that song with Louis Armstrong's "What a Wonderful World."

During the ceremony our students were reflective and Seeing our teens close their eyes and their faces shine brightly while they remembered a special moment of their lives, made the room feel magical. As we ended our closing ceremony in mid-November one teen came up and gave me a really big hug. "What was that for?" I asked her. "I just thought that you needed it," she replied. I felt blessed by that teen. To top it all off, I was awoken that next Thursday morning to the beeps of a text message on my cell phone. Here's what the text said, "I totally woke up at 3am to see the meteor shower... it was overcast. Haha." Even though it was overcast - so she couldn't see the shooting stars – she gave me a blessing – the knowledge that Midrasha makes an impact on our teens and our teens make an impact on our community as well.

We can't always say the formal Baruch ata adonai, eloheinu melekh ha-olam, oseh ma'aseh b'reshet prayer when we are struck by life's beauty and awe, but it doesn't hurt to try.
